San Vicente Dam plays a crucial role in storing both local runoff and water brought to San Diego from the Colorado River and Northern California. The original dam, built by the city of San Diego, was completed in 1943, and in 1947 became the terminus of the first San Diego Aqueduct.