A cobblestone chimney is all that remains of an early 20th century cabin owned by George Sneed, an African-American homesteader. Sneed farmed and ranched in San Vicente Valley until 1936. A 2004 archaeological study done before San Vicente Reservoir was expanded found farm-related artifacts and domestic items at his now-submerged cabin site.